When joint possession is being shown with nouns, or with an organization's or business firm's name, use the possessive form only in the last word of the noun or name. Food and Drug Administration's policy Farrar, Straus & Giroux's books Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Task Force Hammond and Horn's study When possession is individual, each noun takes the possessive form. We matched the infant's and mother's records. Note: When one of the nouns takes a possessive pronoun, the other nouns take the possessive as well. I presented the intern's and my workups. |

Using Apostrophes to Form Plurals

Do not use an apostrophe to indicate the plural of a name. Do not use an apostrophe in the name of an organization in which the qualifying term is used as an adjective or an attributive rather than a possessive. Of course, always follow the official name. Use 's to indicate the plural of letters, signs, or symbols spoken as such, or words referred to as words when s alone would be confusing. Note the italics with inflectional ending in roman type for words, letters, and numbers but not for symbols and signs. He uses too many and's. The manuscript editor
